Fire Safety Compliance

Current Fire Safety Legislation place specific duties on building occupiers with regard to managing the ever-present hazard that is fire. This combined with each employers statutory obligations under various elements of legislation to undertake their activities in a safe manner means that every employer must be in a position to demonstrate clearly how fire safety is being managed within their company.

Employers who fail to do this may find themselves subject to the issuing of a fire safety notice, which will oblige them to carry out changes to the building prior to continuing with their activities. Complying with such a notice will normally entail additional financial cost, which might have been avoided through proper planning and safety management.

Fire Safety Management steps.

In order to assist our clients in complying with their responsibilities, Egan Safety Solutions offers its expertise in doing the following,

- Carrying out fire safety risk assessments,
- Achieving certification of new or recently modified buildings,
- Assessing existing safety measures such as fire detection and suppression systems and making recommendations for any necessary improvements,
- Developing and carrying out fire safety audits,
- Developing a fire safety management policy, to ensure that fire safety is actively managed and that all necessary checks and tasks are scheduled, completed and tracked. Such a policy would also set out the management of extraordinary events such as hot work during construction activities.
