REACH Registration Evaluation Authorisation and Restriction of Chemicals

Prior to the introduction of the REACH directive, manufacturers, importers distributors and indeed end users of chemicals faced an extremely onerous task when attempting to comply with all applicable legislation. The introduction of this directive is designed to streamline the management of the hazards which are associated with chemicals across all European countries. Over 40 different pieces of legislation have been subsumed by this one directive.

Under this legislation all parties involved in the manufacture, preparation, importation, distribution and use of chemicals have significant duties and responsibilities.

This being the case, companies must assess their role under the directive and ensure that they can demonstrate compliance with all aspects of the directive relevant to their organisation.

Egan Safety Solutions can assist its clients in complying with this directive in the following manner.

- We can provide competent and experienced consultants with in-depth knowledge of chemical legislation, whom can assess your organisations role with regard to chemicals and its responsibilities under this directive.
- Our consultants can carry out a review of the use of chemicals within clients operations and ensure that any technical or organisational improvement measures which are necessary are identified and put in place.
- Our consultants can advise our clients on proposed changes to the relevant legislation and the likely effect which these changes will have on our clients operations.

Considering the scope of this directive the roles which are outlined above are only a sample of the services which Egan Safety Solutions offers its clients in respect of the REACH directive.

If you have any queries regarding the obligations which this directive places on your company, please don't hesitate to contact us using our booking form and we will be happy to assist you.
