Construction Placements

The principal legislation requires that all persons undertaking activities are competent to do so. This is further enforced by the SHWW (Construction) Regulations 2006 which requires that duty holders assess the competency of those being appointed in specific roles.

Competency is defined by the SHWW Act 2005 as being a person who having regard to the task to be undertaken and the nature and size of the hazards likely to be encountered, that person has sufficient training, experience and knowledge to carry out their duties appropriately.

The combination of these regulations means that the careful selection of the appropriate person for a specific role during construction is something, which clients must now carry out very thoroughly.

Egan Safety Solutions can assist its clients through providing qualified, trained and experienced safety professionals to undertake specific roles during construction projects.

The duration of our placements can vary to meet our client's requirements.
